TRUTH IN DEATH.

But He Regretted It, and Added a False-hood at Last.

We had a man named Burrows in our mining camp, and he was without doubt the most notorious liar Nevada will ever shel-ter, writes a New York Sun correspondent. ter, writes a New York Sun correspondent. His fame as a liar spread for a hundred miles around, and men used to stop at our camp to get a look at him. He wasn't a wicked man, and he had no malice about him, but he was a natural born liar. He lied about his father, his mother, his wife, brothers, sisters and every body else, and for every hour in the day he had a new falsehood. He had a claim of his own and was fairly industrious, and so we had no was fairly industrious, and so we had no excuse to drive him out, although his lies were continually kicking up ill feeling among the men. One day a lot of earth and rock caved in on him and inflicted fatal injuries, and a number of us knocked off work to be with him in his last moments. You would have thought the shadow of death would have brought a change of sentiment, but it did not. Lying there with only an hour of life left to him, he told us that he had been a pirate on the Pacific and where he had buried a large amount of plunder. We all knew that he was from Ohio and had never seen any ocean; but he stuck to it. One of the men finally felt it his duty to say:

"Burrows, you have only a short time to live. You had best spend that in preparing for eternity."

"I've alius been good," he quietly replied. "Yes, but you are an awful liar, you know."
"Yes, I suppose so. Pve told a million of them, haven't I!"
"No doubt of it."

"And every one has been laid up agin me?"
"Very likely."
"And my chance is rather slim?"

"Well, boys, it's my way, and I can't change at this late day. Just as that cavein came I struck a nugget as big as my head. It would value up a clean $15,000. If you'll be kind enough to pull it out and sell it and send the cash to my wife I'll die feel-He went off soon after that, and we said

He went off soon after that, and we said to each other that he had given us the greatest yarn of all. No one took his claim, which was accounted a poor one, and it lay for three months before one of the boys dug into it one day for the pickaxe buried and forgotten. He hadn't got the pick when he came across a lump of gold which balanced $13,290 in coin, and every shilling of the money was sent on to the widow, as directed. It got there to find there was no widow, but six months later went to a sister. In his dying hour Burrows told the widow, but six months later went to a sister. In his dying hour Burrows told the truth about his find, but, alas! he repented of it and lied about having a wife.

IN A WHALE'S JAWS.

George Leonard, an acting master in the United States navy during the civil war, and stationed on the gun-boat Katahdin, West Gulf blockading squadron, in 1863, told a story of heroism and exhibited marks on his body that corroborated his words, says a letter in the Philadelphia Press. The year 1850 found Leonard as one of the crew of the ship Enterprise, a whaler, in the North Pacific. One day he was stationed crew of the ship Enterprise, a whaler, in the North Pacific. One day he was stationed in the bow of a whale-boat, a long distance from the ship with a brave crew, who had sighted a whale and made for the monster with all possible dispatch. When within proper distance Leonard threw his harpoon, striking the fish hard and deep. In some manner the line, as it was running out, caught the body of one of the men in such a way as to throw him overboard. The man suddenly sank, whereupon Leonard transferred his line to a boatmate and sprang into the ocean in aid of the drowning sailor.

whale between its jaws, his position being inside the monster's mouth, with nothing protruding but one of his arms. In this manner the man was in reality within the jaws of death itself. The whale instantly olunged down into the deep, and, in the words of Leonard himself, "the fish seemed to be going down, down into eternity

No sooner was there a sufficient open-ing made than Leonard forced his body

Up to the surface he swam, when, most strange to say, he found himself within an arm's length of his boat. He was saved. The marks of the whale's violence and the dents of its teeth were very plainly visible on Leonard's arms, and he was always pointed out by his brother naval officers as "The Second Jonah."

John I. Blair, of Blairstown, N. J., is reputed to be worth $50,000,000, yet such is his strong sense of merely holding his wealth in trust for the benefit of his fellow men that he spends upon himself less almost than is paid to his humblest workman. When Mr. Blair stops at the hotel, if he intends to stay over night, he usually asks for a small inside room on the parlor floor. Singular Ways in Which Paper Money

Has Been Lost and Destroyed.

When a small portion of a United States

pote is returned to the Treasury with sufficient proof that the remainder of it has gone out of existence, the Trea sury will give the full value of the original note, says the Washington Post. Naturally the greatest destruction of money is wought by fire and Washington Post. Naturally the greatest destruction of money is wrought by fire, and bits of bills with charred edges are constantly coming in for redemption.

But several instances have occurred where men, in their desperation at their loss, have simply boxed up a lot of ashes, in which there was not the slightest trace of the original material, and demanded hundreds and thousands of dollars for them. Such requests are, of course, refused, and the senders are informed that their only recourse is to ask Congress by special act to indemnify them.

Next to fire the young baby is put down in the department as the most destructive agent. Innumerable affidavits are received in which John Jones, or whatever his name may be, "being duly sworn, deposes and says," that his infant son did chew up and swallow the missing portions of certain five dollar bills, and that the said missing por-tions were thereby wholly destroyed and are now no longer in existence.

The fashion of keeping small pet dogs has also been the cause of many solemn affi-dayits being sent to the department. Your pug and your poodle seem to take especial delight in masticating the fruit and reward of the many days of severe toil of the head of the house. The fancy of mice for ten dollar bills as lining for luxurious nests has been impressed upon the redemption bureau by a long series of examples. Only a few days ago several hundred dollars worth of nest uning was redeemed for a Southern man who had for many years given up all idea of finding his missing treasure. There was $700 of it in the first place, notes of almost the first issue made by the Governalmost the first issue made by the Government early in war times. It had been hidden away in a place supposed to be secure, and had disappeared. A quarter of a century later, in repairing the porch of the old house, the nest of the wealthy mouse had been discovered, and enough of the frag-ments recovered to secure more than half of the original deposit.

Also from the South come most of the noldy, worm-eaten bills which have been nidden in bottles or buried in the earth for years. There are not as many savings banks in the South as in thrifty New En-gland, and hiding places are used. But the habit of using the parlor or kitchen stove as a safety deposit vault is not confined to any one section of the country. Neither is the custom of burning up this treasure by some other member of the fam-ily who is all unaware of its value. Years ago the clerks in the redemption bureau ceased to declaim upon the stupidity of such people. It has become a matter of course with them, and they expect about so many letters every week from people who have warmed two dollar pair of hands with $1,000 worth of silver certificates.

Evidence of a family row crops out in ueer way in the bureau occasionally. Mr. Blank sends on the halt of a ten dollar note with a torn edge and an affidavit that the remainder of the note has been destroyed. Presently comes the other half with a cor-respondingly ragged edge and an affidavit from Mrs. Blank that the first half has been destroyed. Then the redemption bureau people know that there has been an exciting time over money in the Blank family, and there is before them a vivid picture of Blank clinging to one end of the note and his wife to the other end until it parts in the the queer" even in a fragmentary condition There is in the Treasury vault a brown wooden box eighteen inches long, a foo wide and eight inches deep, which contains paper money of the nominal value of several hundred thousand dollars. It is not worth a dollar. The queer thing about it is menner in which it was collected. Every uine money many years ago. The banks which issued it and the officers who signed it are gone and forgotten. It was all sent to the Treasury Department some years ago, and Assistant-Treasurer Whepley under-took to trace up the various banks and get as much as possible of it redeemed. Oc-casionally he found descendants of some of these old bank officials, themselves bankers, who were willing to redeem some of the notes for the sake of the signatures of their fathers, and in this way he succeeded in getting several hundred dollars worth of it redeemed. But of that remaining not a bill redeemed. But of that remaining not a bill can be redeemed. A little of it is Confederate money, but most of it is of banks, State and private, that went out of existence many years ago. The oldest notes are dated back as far as 1812. One package contained $54,000 and another $9,000. The mystery is how so much money could have been lost in the mail. Neither the men who sent it could be found by the Post-Office De-partment, nor could Mr. Whepley find any trace of them or their descendants. The $9,000 package was sent from Brandon, Miss., to Jackson, Miss., in 1840, and the letter accompanying it shows that it was sent in consequence of repeated demands. The most diligent search fails to discover the slightest trace of any such banking company as that in Brandon, Miss., which is sued the notes, most of which are of the somely executed, as are a majority of those in the box.

Ridding a House of Rats.

An interesting, not to say valuable, discovery has been made by Captain Weedin, in charge of the Smithsonian Institute at Washington. The building is infested by rats, and how to get rid of them has long been a perplexing question. Traps were used, but nothing would tempt the rodents to enter. In a store-room drawer was placed a quantity of sunflower seeds, used as food for some of the birds. Into this drawer the rats gnawed their way, a fact which led the Captain to experiment with them as bait in the trap. The result was that the rats can't be kept out. A trap which appears crowded with six or eight rats is found some mornings to hold fifteen. They are turned into the cages containing weasels and minks. The latter will kill a rat absolutely almost before one can see it, so rapid are its movements. The weasels are a trifle slower, but none of the rats escene them. Ridding a House of Bats. are a trifle slower, but none of the rats es-

THE people of Reno can, if they will, learn a useful lesson in these times of fires and floods. The continent has been convulsed by unparalleled floods, destructive fires and gales; it has been a remarkable year and still history has but repeated itself. We can draw a valuable lesson from Seattle, to say nothing about our own bitter experience, that will be valuable if we but heed it. Seattle met the doom that awaits all wooden towns, and the growth and enterprise of come what will in the shape of fire. CHICAGO, June 8 .- The Times this morning published a remarkable story, which has set some people to thinking and has recalled to their minds some mysterious incidents in connection with the disappearance of Dr. Cronin. Cronin is admitted by his friends to have had an insatiable craving for notoriety, and such a proceeding would be thorhad an insatiable craving for notoriety, and such a proceeding would be thoroughly in keeping with the persistency and outlandish expedients previously resorted to by him. I refuse to acknowledge that I have anything to do with the Clan-ns-Gael, or with any report concerning the charges of Dr. Cronin against Alexander Sullivan. If I am referred to as not believing that Dr. Cronin is dead that is true. I do not believe he is dead, and would not be surprised to meet him on the street or to see him come into my office this moment.

"What about the alleged identification of the body found in Chicago?"

"There was no genuine identification," said Mr. Rogers. "In the first place, the body was not that of a man who had died by violence. There was no fracture of the skull—merely a few scratches and abrasions such as might have been made to anybody thrown into any such place. The key to the whole matter lies in the finding of a finger in the catch-basin. The finger, I believe, was procured from some much dancing?" "Oh, dear me, no! But we gave what is called an 'engaged dinner' last week, where eight different couples were invited, and afterwards they retired to eight different corners of the two rooms and whispered all the evening, and it reminded papa and manma so much of their courtship they went out and sat on the stairs and left me alone. Do you wonder I still look tired?"

Why it was Vetoed.

When Tom Bennett was Governor she was not permitted to see it for half an hour. They kept her waiting until she was so excited that when she viewed the body it was impossible for her to identify the bloated face.

"I do not believe Dr. Cronin is dead. There was no reason for his in an investigation—no matter what it might have been—was no reason for the existence of a vendetta against him. The body might have been placed in the catch-basin by men interested in helping the enemies of the Irish people. There are evidently some men deeply bent on bringing out to the public the purposes for which these moneys were expended. If you have noticed the reports of the alleged Cronin murder in all the newspapers, the first three days were remarkably alike, as if inspired by the same set of men. To me the whole thing looks more and more every day as the clever work of some smart men interested in making it appear that Crenin was killed. The doctor, I feel convinced, is living, and has been sent out of the way to help the scheme of an alleged murderer. He may not be cognizant of the scheme, but he is, all the same, being used skillfully to help it."

. AN IDAHO MURDER.

Two Squaws.
For several weeks a correspondence has been going on between Constable Upson of Reno and the Sheriff of Alturas county, Idaho, relative to the whereabouts of Leander Lee, who is charged with killing a couple of squaws with whom he had been living. Having learned that his man was at work at Smith's saw-mill in Long Valley, Sierra county, Cal., Mr. Upson went out there last Friday evening and brought him to town to await the arrival of the Idaho Sheriff, who is expected to reach here to-night or tomorrow morning. It is alleged that the two Indian women had several horses which were disposed of by Lee soon after their diappearance, and a strong suspicion prevailed that they had been murdered, but no clue was obtained until recently when their dead bodies were exhumed, both bearing unmistakable evidence of having been foully dealt with. Lee left Idaho with a Mormon ways a with a Mormon woman, to whom he claims to have been married, but she admits that no marriage ceremony has ever been performed. Nevertheless she seems inclined to stick to the accused, as she insisted on being brought to Reno with him.

Yesterday afternoon a GAZETTE reporter visited Lee at the county jail, and found him to be a man of very moderate intelligence, above medium size and about 37 or 38 years of age. In the early sixties the accused lived with his parents at Smith's Neck in Sierra Valley, but left there several years ago for the North. He stoutly denies knowing anything about the murder of the squaws, and says he made diligent search for them for some time after their disappearance, but it is understood that the evidence against him is of a character that is quite likely to convict.

PROPOSED SHIP CANAL,

By Which Lake Erie and the Ohio River are to be Connected.

An effort is being made at Pittsburg to have a committee of competent gentlemen appointed by the Governor of Pennsylvania to investigate the practicability of building a ship canal from Lake Erie to Pittsburg, and if the investigation will warrant the expenditure, the General Government will be ufficient aid to complete the work. The Pittsburg Gazette has the following in reference to the proposed canal: "The Northwest will be especially benefited, because ore can be transported to Pittsburg and coal can be taken back to the Northwest at a cheaper rate than it is now done by the railroads. If the lake cities, such as Erie, Cleveland, Chicago and Milwau kee can only be interested in the canal there will not be much trouble in bringing the matter prominently before

MISS INMAN'S GUESTS. Were Very Distinguished People, for a Time.

"How dreadfully awkward for Aunt Decima to come just now!" said Miss Helen Inman, as she sat before the glass, brushing out her beautiful blue-black tresses with slow, leisurely strokes, "when the Syden ham Wickfords are here, and mamma is straining every nerve to make a good impression on them."

"But Aunt Decima was grandmamma's sister, and the Sydenham Wickfords are no relations at all," protested Lizzie. "But they are such charming people,"

"All the same," declared Lizzie, "I don't see why mamma's aunt should be tucked away in the garret bed-room, and that fat Mrs. Sydenham Wickford and her blowsy daughter and the English maid put into the

"That is all you know about the requirements of society," said Helen, somewhat disdainfully: "Aunt Decima will do very well, I dare say. If she don't like it she can go back to her huckleberry swamps."

Helen was a brilliant brunette, with lovely liquid eyes, a complexion like balsam blooms and a Cupid's bow of a mouth. Lizzie was an overgrown school-girl of six-teen, who was being kept resolutely in the background until herelder sister's marriage should open to her the gates of society. Mrs. Inman was one of those hard-working ladies who are forever trying to reach one rung higher of the social ladder. Helen was unquestionably a beauty; and she in-tended that Helen's good looks should fetch the full market price. For the turthering of this scheme Miss Inman had been taken to Europe, to receive the seal set by foreign travel. And, on the return voyage, they had been fortunate enough to meet the Sydenham Wickfords, coming over to view the untried wilds of America.

Mrs. Sydenham was the niece—or at least she said she was—of Lord Corkindale, and niece of the Baron Brattleberg. Her daughter was going to write a book about the defunct Indian tribes. Her husband—a little man, with pale hair and eye-glasses—was the bearer of dispatches to the British Min-

To all this Mrs. Inman listened with rapture—and she considered herself highly honored when the Sydenham Wickfords consented to accept her hospitality, instead of going, as had been their original plan, to But all this involved no little expense

Mrs. Inman, although refined, was not rich. The hiring of additional servants, the returnshing of a good part of the house, the ordering in of dainties from the nearest restaurant, nearly wore out her slender

"But they are such charming acquaint-ances," said Mrs. Inman. "They can't stay very long, because Florinda wishes to visit Dakota and Nebraska before the fall sets in to gather material for her book. And what an advantage it will be for Helen to know them in society this winter."

"Society!" repeated Lizzie, leaning her plump elbows on her mother's dressing-taplump elbows on her mother's dressing-ta-ble. "It seems to me, mamma, that society is always demanding sacrifices from us, and never giving any thing back."

"You are only a child," said Mrs. Inman.
"But to think that Aunt Decima should drop in upon us now, of all times in the world!"

Aunt Decima was a delicate timed. It the

"I am afraid," said she, timidly, "that I have arrived at an inopportune season."
Mrs. Inmañ and Helen were both silent.
Lizzie, whose tendency italways was to take the weaker side, put her arm tenderly around the little old lady's waist, and gave her a hug.

"Pil take you about wherever you want to go, Aunt Decima," said she. "I'm as good as any guide-book, and I delight in Aunt Decima smiled gratefully on her little grand-niece; and so it happened that she and Lizzie formed a little clique of their own, while Mrs. Inman and Helen devoted themselves to the Sydenham Wickfords.

"Your housekeeper, I presume—a most respectable-looking old person," said Mrs. Sydenham Wickford, nodding towards Aunt Decima: "but a little deaf, I should fawncy. I awsked her to see that the maids brought hot water to my room every morning, and she really—ah—acted as if she didn't hear me."

Mrs. Inman turned red.

"We American ladies are our own house."

"We American ladies are our own house-keepers," said she "Mrs. Everard is my aunt. Aunt Dessie, let me present you to Mrs. Sydenham Wickford." "Delighted, I am sure," said Mrs. Syden-

"Delighted, I am sure," said Mrs. Sydenham, who, being very stout, and very tightly laced up in a flame-colored satin dress, was unable to courtesy in reply to Aunt Decima's bow. "And this tall gurl—did I understand that she is your step-daugh-"No," smiled Mrs. Inman; "she is my child is apt to fall into fits of abstraction over her literary labors, and I am quite perishing for my dinner!"

After that Aunt Decima and Lizzie kept out of the drawing-room.

"We don't like to be patronized, do we!" said Lizzie, with a laugh. "But it makes me augry to see mamma and Helen wait upon those vulgar English people. Dear Aunt Decima, let us go back to the old farm n Massachusetts. I am sure I should like the country. Mamma and Helen don't need me, and I am sure they wouldn't mies me."

"I am expecting a friend on the next steamer," gently spoke Mrs. Everard. "As soon as she arrives we will all go back home."

"I hope it will be soon," said Lizzie "for I am sure you must be awfully uncom fortable in that hot attic chamber, where the roof touches your head and there isn't a sign of a carpet on the floor."

Aunt Decuma had never before seen her New York relations, but, with olden time notions of hospitality, she had taken it for granted that a warm welcome would be extended to her. And she was more than a little surprised that Mrs. Sydenham Wickford's maid had been assigned a far more comfortable room than herself.

"Perhaps." she told herself. "I am a little Decima out."

"Mamma is giving a reception to the Sydenham Wickfords to-night," said Lizzie, one evening. "Ever so many nice people are invited. You should see how beautiful the parlors—drawing-rooms, Mrs. Sydenham Wickford calls them—are decorated with flowers. And Mrs. Sydenham Wickford herself has got on a red velvet gown that makes her look as if she were on fire. Floring is being dressed by the maid now. Florinda is being dressed by the maid now in white. White, like a girl, and she thirty at least! What are you going to wear

Mrs. Everard colored. "I have only my black silk," said she. "And, besides, I have not been invited to come down stairs." "Oh, put on the black silk, then!" cried Lizzle. "Of course mamma expects you. I only wish I was 'out'; but I shall peep in through the library door and see it all. There's a cluster of palms there that will hide a half-open door to perfection. Hurry, Aunt Dessie, and I'll do your gray hair up in those lovely puffs I learned yesterday looking in at the hair-dresser's window."

The rooms were all bright with flowers and lights, but none of the guests had yet arrived when Aunt Decima came downstairs, looking as neat and sweet as a fairy god-mother. Mrs. Inman was flushed and tired out, in her helietrepe satin. Helen was lovely—pink tulle and apple blossoms, Mrs. Sydenham Wickford's ruby velvet seemed to diffuse a positive atmosphere of heat around her, and Miss Florinda's red face and small blue eyes were emphasized by her white gown. Mr. Sydenham Wickford's evening dress and pumps had struck an attitude near a standard lamp, which he seemed resolved to retain. At that mo-ment the footman (hired for the occasion) flung open the door.
"The Countess of Alchester!" he uttered, in stentorisn accents. Mr. Sydenham Wickford jumped as if he had been shot. Mrs. Sydenham Wickford made an ineffectual grasp at her smelling-bottle. Miss Florinda's lower jaw fell, as a tall, handsome old lady, in a gray traveling dress, came into the room, looking with rather surprised eyes around her.

"I was told—" she began. "Goodness me! Wickford! is that you! What on earth brings you here?" (to Mr. Sydenham Wick-ford, who kept bowing, in a series of jerks, like an automatic toy).

Before she could utter another word. however, she was clasped in Aunt Decima's arms. "The friend I was expecting, Mary," said Aunt Decima to her niece. "She has arrived sooner than I had hoped. Lady Alchester, this is my niece, Mrs. Inman— Miss Inman, her daughter!"

eagle eye took in the situation at once, as she glanced toward the English guests, "is my late butler, Wickford, and his wife, who was formerly lady's maid to old Mrs. Orion Hunt, and inherited quite a sum through that lady's will! Excuse me, dear Decima, but how on earth came they here!" Never did a toy balloon collapse with greater suddenness than did the Sydenham

Wickfords. The ex-butler kept on bowing until he reached the threshold; the former until he reached the threshold; the former tiring-woman of old Mrs. Orion Hunt muttered something about "her old enemy the neuralgia," and got out of the room as fast as the train of the ruby velvet dress would permit; and Miss Florinda was not long behind her. Of all the group, Aunt Decima and the Countess of Alchester alone were at their ease, while Lizzie, behind the screen of palms and rubber trees, was heartily enjoying the scene. Nothing more was heard about Lord Cor-kindale and Baron Brattleberg. The English guests left early the next morning, probably for the far West, certainly with the intent of putting as many miles as possible between themselves and Lady Alchester, And Mrs. Everard took he Glen as soon as Mrs. Inman would allow "The worst of it all, though," said Mrs. Inman, sadly, "is that we have been so dreadfully deceived by those horrid Sydenham Wickfords! What will people say?"—Amy Randolph, in N. Y. Ledger. THE CONVICT'S KISS.

A Grateful and Gallant Salute to a Lawyer in Petticoats. A more or less amusing incident is told at the expense of Miss Robinson, a woman who, says the Providence (R. I.) Journal, has had some notoriety by her persistence in pushing herself into the ranks of the legal fraternity of Rhode Island. She was assistant counsel in a case in which an imassistant counsel in a case in which an im portant witness was a man who is in the State prison on a life sentence. The unhappy wretch had not been out of durance for seventeen years, and the sight of a bit of the world, even though that bit was no more cheerful or attractive than the court 100m, filled his whole soul with a wild joy. He was so thoroughly delighted that in a moment of rapture he threw his arms about Miss Rooinson and kissed her fervently, as means of expressing his appreciation of the distant glimpse of liberty he had, through means of the summons to the wit-ness box, enjoyed. The lawyer who was senior counsel in the case naturally felt called upon to defend Miss Robinson, since even admission to the bar does not confer upon a woman the strength to fight her own battles, when the convict disarmed his wrath and brought the blushes to the cheek of the maiden barrister by saying:

"I am glad she is your wife, because you will excuse me for kissing her. You see I couldn't help it."

The incident ought to be true, and is told as fact. It illustrates the beautiful and refining influence of woman in the court-room, the jail, or wherever she may find herself. No doubt the convict is from that day a changed being. If he is not, he ought to be, or the story has absolutely no moral whatever.

An Indisputable Epitaph.

There is a historic plantation, the property of Dr. C. S. Oliver, situated on Broad river about nine miles southwest of Elberton, Ga. Among other objects of interest on it are several graveyards, some of the tombs dating as far back as 1704. On one grave-stone is engraved a peculiar opitaph, which reads as follows:

"ELIZABHTH DAWES.

Died at the age of 49 Years.

Death's mystic wand no one can tell, Her soul is either in Heaven or hell."
